UNEMPLOYMENT: Created by Bankers to Aid 'Third World'!

Nationalist comment

WHAT WE THINK

on the month's news

Shuffling the Immigrant pack

The latest fraud in the attempt to deceive the public that strong action is being planned to curb immigration is the report of the Commons Select Committee published last month.

Despite the fact that this report was hailed by Fleet Street, particularly that section of it which supports the Conservative party, with such sensational headlines as "Stem the Tide!" and "Stop the Flood!", the report actually recommends nothing that will literally stop immigration of any category. It completely endorses so-called commitments to let in the unknown numbers of passport holders from Africa and Asia and their dependants; it advocates allowing further large-scale immigration in special circumstances; and it supports the continuing invasion of dependants and fiancées. The completely fraudulent appearance of measures to curb immigration is created by proposals to tinker with nationality laws and to shuffle the categories of Immigrants so that some have 'priority' over others in the never-ending queue.

The report states that there will be no further large scale immigration unless in "exceptional individual circumstances". In other words, it does not commit itself to stop mass immigration at all. One "exceptional individual circumstance" will be the flood of 3 million Hong Kong Chinese when the colony eventually reverts to the ownership of mainland China, a circumstance to which the Select Committee naturally did not refer.

The Select Committee stated that there was no question of going back on commitments to UK passport holders and their dependants, because the treasonous bunk referred to as the "moral force" of these commitments made it impossible. Consequently, says the report, there will be "no significant change in the pattern of this immigration." The committee thought that if immigration 'generally' is subject to more "strict control", then there will be "less public disquiet" if passport holders are hastened into the country. This of course means that they hope to avoid a public outcry if the flood of such Immigrants can be disguised by speeding up their entry while a smokescreen of 'control' is thrown up.

The 30,000 or more East African passport holders and their dependants are regarded as a clear case of admission. So far as those from India are concerned, the report accepts their right of admission while at the same time confessing it has no idea of the numbers to be expected! The pathetic proposal here is that a round figure quota of those entitled to come should be announced, after which such immigration would be allowed to continue on the basis of 'special vouchers'!

The report recommends nothing to curb the immigration of dependants of Immigrants already in Britain. They are to receive 'priority', though, over other categories. The first priority group to be allowed in are wives and children of Immigrants who settled in Britain before 1973; secondly, wives and children of those who settled after that date where there are children under 12; then "compassionate cases" of "other dependants"; and finally, the flood of male 'fiancées' who — the newspaper reports announced triumphantly — are put to "the back of the queue". Not removed from it — they just go to the back of it!

Unbelievably, this utter drivel from the Commons Select Committee could be described by the Daily Telegraph as a "total ban on all future immigration"! Depending on whether the Committee members were Labour or Conservative, opinions varied as to whether these meaningless proposals would produce a "sharp reduction in the inflow" or an "increase in immigration in the short-term", in other words, whether it would speed up or slow down the rate of immigration. Whichever is the outcome, the fact remains that the alien Immigrant flood will continue unabated, and these latest proposals will do nothing to stop it.

It is simply a question of how long it takes them to get here.

France: how the left nearly won

The victory of the right-wing coalition in the recent French elections provided some interesting aspects.

As the elections approached, nearly all media predictions were that the left alliance of Mitterand and Marchais would emerge triumphant. These predictions were enforced by the 'findings' of countless opinion polls.

Having then forecast a leftist victory, the media pundits were obliged to back up their prognostications with some sort of rationale for such a turn of events. How was it that the French, who had experienced a considerable national revival under right-wing governments since 1958 and whose economic performance during this time had far outstripped that of Britain, bringing with it a prosperity for all classes that France had never before known... how was it that they could possibly want a change which would be likely to take the country back to the political conditions of the chaotic and stagnant Fourth Republic and in the process give the Communists considerable power?

All sorts of reasons were put forward which did not sound very convincing. Young, first-time voters were not impressed with the patriotic rhetoric of Gaullism and did not know how bad conditions had been in the old days. Certain social and occupational groups demanded a greater slice of the national cake. Not enough of the nation's prosperity was going to social services.

Rise of French left a media creation?

In the event all the prophets were proved wrong. The left did not win. The reasons given as to why they might win were seen to be groundless or, at the best, exaggerated.

Could it be that the biggest reason why the French might have deserted their senses and elected a left-wing government was left out of all the analyses — that the International Financial establishment and the news media which, as a rule, dances to its tune wanted the left to win, because it calculated that a France thus governed would be nationally weaker and therefore a more pliant tool in its hand than under the present rightist coalition? The media was thereby orchestrated so as to make a win for the left both more attractive and more likely.

This could account for the fact that the left had, in the run up to the election, as much support as it evidently did, and for the fact that its support was grossly exaggerated.

We should know by now that under our vaunted Western 'democracy' the fact that one set of national leaders have proved that they can govern a country much better than their rivals is no guarantee that the electorate will not turn them out and put their rivals in. If those rivals have certain very powerful interests on their side — powerful enough to manipulate public opinion through their control of the mass media, such factors as success and failure will not count for nearly as much as they should.

The commonsense of the French people led them to reject the left at the polls — but not by anything like the margin that they ought to have done, given France's recent history. The narrowness of the left's defeat, when in all sanity it should have been annihilated, is a testimony to the power of those hidden forces in contemporary politics which can sway the popular will against all considerations of rational judgement. We ignore those forces at our peril.

Planned unemployment

While the Government wails and wrings its hands over Britain's unemployment rate and repeatedly assures the electorate of its determination to bring it down, behind the scenes it is co-operating in measures that will ensure unemployment gets worse.

In a recent interview the head of the World Bank, Robert McNamara, acknowledged that the governments of the developed nations were willingly collaborating in a scheme to run down systematically their own industries in order to give an increasing share of their home markets to imports from the so-called 'underdeveloped' countries. Said McNamara:—

"... we need to help developed countries anticipate by product line the expansion of exports from developing countries so that they may plan to adjust their economies accordingly ... if the expansion of imports were anticipated over, say, a ten-year period ... there would be time for orderly adjustments."

At the time of the last big loan that Britain negotiated from the International Monetary Fund one of the firm conditions laid down by the IMF was that we would agree not to introduce import controls. The IMF and the World Bank work in close harness with each other, the one concentrating on loans to countries momentarily in balance-of-payments difficulties and the other on financing big development projects mainly in Third World countries. Britain, in agreeing to the terms of the IMF loan, is clearly paving the way inside her own economy for more unemployment in the future.

Already this process can be seen at work. Our market is being flooded with cheap textile products from the Far East to the great detriment of our home textile industry. A huge volume of electrical and mechanical goods are pouring into Britain from places like Hong Kong, Singapore, Malaysia, Korea and Taiwan.

The picture is quite clear. While all the politicians make speeches against unemployment, in practice they are actively promoting it by their allegiance to internationalism and their active collaboration with One-World financial agencies, whose purpose it is to use the cheap labour of the Orient to bring the economies of countries like Britain to ruin.

McNamara's words make clear that the process is to be gradual. If it were otherwise, our unemployment figures would go dramatically up and in the resulting furor popular pressure to end the racket might become too great for the political safety of the parties in power. By the slower method our Government (and the Conservatives, who approve of the same policy) hope that the orders of their international masters can be carried out without the people noticing what is happening.

Coggan: clerical dupe

Dr. Coggan, Archbishop of Canterbury — surely the archetype of the spineless and effete clerical liberal — recently uttered his wholehearted support for a world tyranny exercised through the United Nations.

Writing in a Diocesan Letter, he proclaimed that a UN "peacekeeping force with modern aids" could do an awful lot for "world peace", acting like a "professional police force". He also called for a "stronger world order", which he believed would promote greater international understanding. "I believe it can be done," he said, "and so do our experts in the Foreign Office. They recognise that the United Nations is a very good basis."

How the evil men behind the scenes who are plotting the "world order" fate for us all must love these decadent dupes who infest the Church today, and who can be relied on, in the haze of their liberal, idealistic stupidity, to support any scheme that will abolish nations in favour of a world dictatorship.

Of course such a system will bring 'peace' to the world, for the simple reason that nobody will be in a position to resist the professional world police force. Like the 'peace' that reigns in the Soviet Union, it will be the peace of death. And is Dr. Coggan simple-minded enough to believe that, when this Marxist millennium actually arrives, it will be the kind of society where the Christian religion will have a premier place?

Meaningful and relevant

A Conservative conference on education last month heard that the whole future of religious education was in "the throes of a major crisis" as a result of falling standards, shortage of teachers and a rejection of the subject by pupils.

One teacher at the conference, the Head of Divinity at Manchester Grammar School, said that "the church had failed to reach the younger generation," and went on to describe the kind of religious education that was needed in schools:—

"We are not talking about peddling bible stories and out-worn dogmas and incomprehensible creeds and sentimental hymns but religion presented in the relevant language of our time."

When are these so-called 'Conservatives' going to realise that it is largely because religion has been subverted with all the 'meaningful' and 'relevant' language of our time such as multi-racialism, pseudo-Communism and Heaven knows what other kinds of 'progressive' nonsense that the Christian religion is in the parlous state that it is? The Church has failed to reach the younger generation largely for the same reasons, for people are attracted to it for the certainties of those dogmas that have now been decreed 'outworn', and not for 'dialogues' with Marxism and the politics of "world order".

Another foreign import we can do without

THE KU KLUX KLAN is trying to set itself up in business in this country – no doubt you will have noticed.

First Mr. David Duke, head of one Klan faction, lands in Britain and announces his intention to get the KKK going over here. Next Mr. Bill Wilkinson, head of another Klan faction, pops up here and announces that he is going to do likewise.

Exactly what differentiates one of these Klan factions from the other is something which few Britons will know.

And, we suspect, fewer still will care.

For whatever the merits or otherwise of the Ku Klux Klan to Americans, it is totally irrelevant in this country. It is alien to this country. It is not needed in this country.

It is in fact just a nuisance.

The Klan leaders say they are coming over here because Britain has a race problem, like America.

So it does, but we have our ways of dealing with our race problem and we do not require outsiders to come over here and do it for us. America has her ways of dealing with her race problem and it would be impertinent for us to go over there and try to do it for her.

There is a movement in Britain perfectly capable of dealing with Britain's race problem. That movement is the National Front.

The way of the National Front is the way of open, above-board lawful political action. Marches, demonstrations, public meetings, literature distribution, all aimed at explaining the problem to the people. Then the rallying of public support by contesting elections – the seeking of political power through the ballot box.

Not running round in the dead of night concealing ourselves under hoods and burning crosses.

We don't necessarily fall for the anti-Klan propaganda churned out by the political left, by the gutter press, by Hollywood and by those who have a vested interest in race-mixing. We don't believe that the Klan was, or is now, just motivated by hate. We don't believe that its aim is to ill-treat the coloured man.

As for its methods, its ceremonies, its ritual, its customs – they may represent the best method of defending the White Race in America, they may not. That is for Americans to decide.

What we British will decide is the approach to be used in defending the White Race in our country, and most Britons have already decided that the National Front approach is the right approach and not any other.

There will of course always be a few pathetic little cranks who will favour the Klan approach here. For one thing, they can hide their identities beneath their hoods and dunces' caps. That way has a certain appeal to those too cowardly to come out into the open, and for those who want to find a substitute for serious political activity – the drop-outs from the arena of real political action.

Probably the Klan leaders from the States are under no illusions about the small-time clowns they are likely to recruit in this country. Probably they didn't spend all that money on the trip over the Atlantic mainly for the purpose of recruiting. Probably they did it for the publicity. In that case they haven't done too badly.

Klan faction leader Wilkinson no doubt thought he was onto a good thing from the publicity point of view when he claimed his mythical contacts with the National Front. In fact the NF wouldn't waste five minutes on him.

Duke, while he was here, managed to get time on radio and TV. Those who happened to hear him might well think that he was a young man of sincerity and intelligence who may in the fullness of time have something valuable to contribute to the cause of the White Man in America.

Right now he has nothing at all to contribute to the cause of the White Man in Britain and he would have done better not to come.

We have a homegrown British product called the National Front which right at this moment is probably making more progress towards winning political influence than anyone of like aims anywhere else in the world.

When it comes to a style of doing things, that success speaks for itself.

THE NEWS OF THE WORLD'S DIRTY GAMES

LATE last December it will be remembered that the News of the World covered its front pages with particulars of court convictions sustained by John Tyndall and myself.

As is well known, none of those convictions was for dishonesty or any other act which might reflect discredit on our personal characters. All the offences stemmed from purely political activity during our admittedly wild and woolly 'political adolescence' of more than a decade ago.

Details of our offences were to have been incorporated into Joe Ashton MP's Labour Party Parliamentary Broadcast, which was an hysterical and fundamentally dishonest attack on the National Front and which was transmitted early in December.

But the BBC authorities insisted on the deletion of the details as our offences had been "spent" under the terms of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act which makes it unlawful to publish details of an individual's court convictions after a period of years has elapsed in which the individual has sustained no further convictions.

The News of the World, full of bogus courage and moral humbug (so characteristic of that breed of journalist who derive their living from sniffing along the gutters in an endless quest for undiscovered turds) splashed "the full facts" the BBC had deleted, declaring it was prepared to risk all in its determination to provide its readership with "the truth".

NO COURAGE NEEDED

No courage or moral imperatives prompted the News of the World's action. The BBC refused to broadcast Ashton's smearmongering not for lack of courage nor a desire to be fair to John Tyndall and myself, but because the BBC is bound by the terms of its Charter, granted by Parliament, which requires the Corporation not to broadcast unlawful material.

The News of the World is not bound by such a Charter and was not therefore inhibited by any consideration other than the possibility of court action under the terms of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act.

While it is unlawful to publish an individual's past convictions after they have become "spent" under the terms of the Act, such an action is not a criminal offence. All such an unlawful action amounts to is a particular type of libel in respect of which the injured individual can only secure justice by means of a lengthy (years) and extremely expensive (thousands of pounds) private civil action.

The News of the World is part of Rupert Murdoch's multi-million pound, multi-national publishing empire — News International — which has holdings in Australia, Britain, the United States and Canada. It employs an army of lawyers and has millions of pounds to spend on legal actions. Compared to such money power, the financial resources of John Tyndall and myself — even if backed to the hilt by the NF — are puny.

ESTABLISHMENT BULLY BOYS

When these realities are borne in mind it can be seen that the News of the World, so far from acting the role of the daring crusader for "Truth" was simply acting as one of the Establishment's bully boys involved in an attempt at character-assassination.

John Tyndall and I are leading figures in a new political movement which owes nothing, intellectually or financially, to the Establishment and which has shown the potential to make inroads into the nation's political power structure.

In the face of such a threat the reaction of the Establishment is inevitable: John Tyndall and Martin Webster must be destroyed ... by character assassination if possible — but any other kind of assassination will do if we appear to be capable of surviving the assaults of the media.

In addition to character assassination the people who prompt the media's 'hit' men may have a motive in mind beyond mere character assassination.

The party managers of both the Conservative and Labour parties fear the NF's plan to put 300+ candidates in the field at the next General Election. They know that NF candidates can win high enough votes to be able to lose for either major party seats which they might otherwise win. Thus both parties are anxious to see as few NF candidates in the field as possible.

LITIGATION TRAP?

As I examined in our last issue, the idea of the Board of Deputies of British Jews principal MP, Greville Janner, is to bump up the cost of candidates' election deposits. This idea has been opposed by many sections of the Establishment's media as being too crude and obvious a method of monopolising "democracy".

Perhaps the media's tactic of perpetrating ever more outrageous defamations and libels on the NF's leadership is being carried out in the hope that we will be provoked into involving ourselves, our time, our nervous energy and most importantly, the party's money, in a protracted series of High Court actions.

If this tactic were successful then large sums of money would be going into lawyers' pockets rather than into our new Head Office building fund, candidates' deposits, election leaflets, envelopes, posters and all the gear we will need to hit our enemies where it hurts them most: the ballot box.

Merely because the News of the World allowed Joe Ashton to publish what the BBC would not allow him to broadcast it should not be thought that the News of the World has become pro-Labour.

On the contrary, the News of the World is being used by Margaret Thatcher and her Tory Central Office advisers to condition the public to accept the desirability of the Tory Party having (pretending to have) an "anti-Immigration" policy.

Since late last year, the News of the World has been flooded with horror stories about the NF, then the British Movement 'Honour Guard', then Ku Klux Klan 'Wizards'. The purpose of these stories is to suggest that unless the Tory Party takes up Immigration then the race problem will be exploited by horrible fanatics.

It was not by any accident that the News of the World obtained exclusive rights to cover a cross-burning ceremony led by a hooded nonentity from America who had been lured to Britain by promises of huge publicity.

Nor was it by accident that the News of the World exclusively obtained the Tory Central Office leaked details of the Tory Party's plans to launch its phoney "anti-Immigration" policy.

The Observer of 23rd March noted:

"Mrs. Margaret Thatcher has acquired a new friend. He is Mr. Larry Lamb, Editorial Director of Mr. Rupert Murdoch's News International which owns The Sun and the News of the World. From time to time Mrs. Thatcher has been seen slipping into Mr. Lamb's office for a discreet whisky and chat. The hospitality is returned ..."

I wonder if that fool Ashton realises yet that he was given space in the News of the World not for the prime purpose of hammering the NF but in order to provide "justification" for Mrs. Thatcher's "anti-Immigration" policy!

YOUTHS TORTURE GIRL, 13

By Our Crime Correspondent

A 13-YEAR-OLD girl was tortured for an hour by six youths in an empty block of flats in Brixton, South London, yesterday.

Police said the girl was burned with matches and cigarette lighters, beaten, and subjected to a savage sex assault.

The attack on the girl, whose condition was said last night to be "serious," was described by one detective as "one of the most savage I have ever seen."

Police said the girl had been to a party in Ferndale Road, Brixton, and had left with a group of youths at 6.45 am. As the girl reached Ferndale Court, an unoccupied block of flats, she was dragged inside by six youths.

"They kept the girl in a flat for about an hour," said a detective. "She was burned with matches and cigarette lighters, and beaten."

Last night police appealed for anyone who was in the Ferndale Road and Bedford Road area early yesterday morning and saw six coloured youths with a young white girl to contact them immediately at Brixton police station.

PUNTERS IGNORE RAPED WOMAN'S PLEAS FOR HELP

By T. A. SANDROCK, Crime Correspondent

AN 18-YEAR-OLD woman who was held prisoner for eight hours, raped four times and sexually assaulted, was ignored after she escaped from her captor and begged for help in a betting-shop and in a Shepherds Bush street.

Eventually she was dragged screaming out of the betting shop and down the street by a Black man—and still no one intervened.

The man fled only when she managed to break free a second time.

Ripped off clothes

The woman, who was in the Shepherds Bush area at 5 a.m. on Saturday, was approached by a black man who invited her to a party. She accompanied him to a flat, but no one else was present.

The man attacked her, ripped off her clothes, raped her four times and sexually assaulted her.

At about 1 p.m. on Saturday, she managed to escape from the flat, ran along Shepherds Bush Road, and into the betting shop. But she was ignored by everyone she asked for help.

She had been there for a minute or two when the Black man who had been pursuing her dragged her outside. But still no one went to her aid.

'Goatee beard'

She continued screaming and struggling outside in the street, and managed to break away from the man, who then fled. Police were called and the woman was medically examined, treated, and taken home.

Her assailant is described as being about 30 years old, five feet ten inches tall, of stocky build, with a "goatee" beard.

Police toured the area later on Saturday, and yesterday tried to trace witnesses to the incident, described as "a violent sexual assault."

A brief reminder about Kings, Queens and Communists

IN HIS article "Keep the Royal Family out of Race Relations Minefield" (July 1977) Martin Webster highlighted the spectacle of our Queen entertaining Communists — and of Prince Charles associating with known revolutionaries and republicans of the Socialist Workers Party.

These people are, as all patriots know, aiming at Revolution to bring about a Communist society in which royalty will be hounded out of existence — a stereotyped society dominated by the junk-shop ideals of the far Left.

The French Revolutionary Reign of Terror of 1793–1794 was Communism's first great advance. It was the blueprint for the Russian Revolution of 1917 and of mass violence everywhere in recent history. The Revolution in France was organised and led by middle-class journalists and lawyers. Their troops were gangs of vagrants and the Paris Mob. A useless and irresponsible aristocracy was incapable of resisting the anarchy that engulfed France, preferring instead the observance of an empty and pointless Court Etiquette. For example, worrying about how far down the chest the hat should be held when addressing a royal bastard. They squandered millions of francs on pleasure while society collapsed around them.

The slow-witted Louis XVI was deposed by the Revolutionaries in 1792 and a Republican Government called a "Convention" took control. It was dominated by the extreme left-wing Jacobins and Montagnards — the driving force of the Revolution. Its leaders, Jacques Danton and Maximilien Robespierre, demanded the King's execution on the grounds that kingship itself was a crime. The Convention voted on the issue by a show of hands "so that traitors may be known." Sentence of death was approved and the King of France was executed by the dreaded guillotine.

When Marie Antoinette, Queen of France, appeared before a Revolutionary Tribunal, the Assistant Prosecutor of the Republic, Jacques Hebert had already thought up a fantastic but entirely false crime with which to charge her. An accusation so obscene that there would be no chance of an acquittal. The Queen was accused of having had sexual excesses with her son, the 8 years old Dauphin. The boy had previously been separated from his mother and programmed by Hebert over a period of several months. He was plied with brandy, billiards and obscene books; his bed was unmade for six months, both it and he were alive with vermin.

In the autumn of 1793 the Queen was taken to the Place de la Revolution for execution. Her hands were tied painfully behind her back, her hair was roughly cropped and a bonnet was jammed on her head. She sat on a plank in an open tumbril, pulled by two cart-horses for the 45 minute bone-jarring journey. Her escort was the jeering Paris Mob.

In death, as in life, the Republic had declared that there should be equality, even on the journey to the scaffold.

In the Reign of Terror that followed, thousands lost their heads for offences real or imagined, against "The People". If a person forgot to address another as "citizen" he was guillotined. If a man coveted another's wife he simply denounced the husband as a royalist sympathiser. Hence the Revolution turned on itself, even to the extent of beheading its own leaders — including the murderous Robespierre.

BOLSHEVIK OBSCENITIES

The Royal Family in Russia, at the outbreak of the Bolshevik Revolution in late 1917, consisted of the Tsar Nicholas II, the Tsarina Alix, a 13 years old son Alexei, and four young daughters — Olga, Tatiana, Marie and Anastasia. At first it was hoped that the Tsar's family would be allowed to live in exile in Britain, as guests of the Tsar's first cousin George V. But in order to reach a Russian seaport it was necessary to pass through Petrograd (now Leningrad). The Petrograd Soviet refused permission and the British Government declined to offer shelter.

The Royal prisoners were taken by train to Tobolsk in Siberia. The following May they were transferred to their final destination — Ekaterinburg. On July 15 1918, by order of the Lenin Government, members of the Committee of the Ural Soviet met at Ekaterinburg and sentenced the Royal Family to death. A rabid Bolshevik named Yurovsky was given the job of executioner. In the middle of the night of July 15, Yurovsky ordered all the family to assemble. Sentence of death was read out, although exactly what "crime" the children had committed was never disclosed.

Immediately the Red guards indulged in an orgy of slaughter and crude butchery to a degree that was almost obscene. The unrecognisable bodies were taken to a nearby forest, seared with sulphuric acid, burned and thrown down a mineshaft.

A grateful government awarded Yurovsky the Inspectorship of Ekaterinburg Province and a pension. The name of Ekaterinburg itself was changed to Sverdlovsk, in memory of the Jewish Bolshevik — Minister Jacob Sverdlovsk — who had organised the revolting murders.

The Royal Houses of Capet and Romanov were autocratic. Today the British Royal Family is democratic. Yet any Red will tell you that it makes no difference.

Remember, if and when the Left seizes power, Royalty will be "abolished".

In Communist states, royal families cannot exist. They must be murdered, because kings, queens and their heirs — imprisoned or alive in exile — provide a rallying point for patriots determined to halt and destroy the Revolution. Therefore they must be executed — publicly if the people are depraved enough to allow it. Otherwise privately and violently.

The Royal House of Windsor is our rallying point and the National Front provides the patriots for the fight against the slavery of International Communism. God forbid that we should ever see a guillotine in Trafalgar Square.

THE ILLUSION OF RADICALISM

SPEARHEAD has devoted many of its pages recently to what has been called 'The Democracy Farce'. By that, of course, is meant the sedulously fostered illusion that we live today in a democratic society — a society that frequently permits the expression of every alternative political point of view, irrespective of how strongly the ruling powers may be opposed to it.

Such a 'democracy', as we know, simply does not exist. Its appearance only exists, and that seems enough to satisfy the average British citizen who is always expressing his thankfulness that he lives in a 'democracy'. He is perfectly happy in that illusion so long as he can see what he thinks are a multi-party system, free elections and a free press. What in fact exists is a system that is 'democratic' only as long as outsiders do not take part in the system and offer a real challenge to it. The moment they do, democracy becomes a tyranny. The National Front is offering that challenge, so now there is a scheme afoot to keep the NF from participating in elections by raising financial deposits, a scheme put forward after the main parties had awarded themselves extra finance from the public exchequer.

Of course while this kind of corruption goes on behind closed doors, the public must see a very different face of democracy. Perhaps the most important face which our illusory democracy must present for public view is that of choice — the notion that real differences exist between newspapers and journalists, between political commentators, and above all between the main political parties, between Government and Opposition.

The true picture is very different. No such choice and no such fundamental differences actually exist. What you have is a liberal consensus tyranny. All politicians, all media men and all policy or ideas merchants everywhere meet on a common ground of shared values. There are no exceptions. These values are liberal-left, multi-racialist and internationalist, and anyone who rejects those principles totally will find that his path to fame, fortune and advancement in today's democracy comes to an abrupt dead-end. Of course, you can be a socialist, i.e. a person who believes that within liberal, internationalist and multi-racialist society, there should be less private profit and more redistribution of wealth. Or you can be a conservative, i.e. a person who does not believe those things should obtain in our liberal, internationalist and multi-racialist society, and who also advocates private education or firmer moral standards. You can even be a revolutionary socialist or a conservative reactionary, for both are able to argue that their doctrines are more genuinely devoted to liberal ideas, 'freedom' and internationalism. But what you cannot be is an opponent of the fundamental principles of liberalism, internationalism and multi-racialism.

This tyrannical consensus of political ideas, which is frequently disguised as 'moderation' or the 'middle ground', exists because at the very top of the Establishment is a controlling financial elite upon whom all governments, political parties, news media and journalists ultimately depend for patronage, and which is dedicated to the creation of a raceless and nationless 'world community'.

But of course it would not do if there appeared to be no opposition at all to the liberal consensus tyranny, for people would then quickly realise that it was indeed a tyranny. There has to be an appearance of radical opposition if there is to be an appearance of democracy. It is necessary for ideas to be put forward which seem aggressively different, opposed to the prevailing viewpoint, critical of orthodox thinking and the operations of Establishment figures. Naturally, these cannot be real new and radical ideas which might upset the apple-cart. They just have to look that way.

MERELY AN EXTENSION

We see the result today in what might be called consensus radicalism! It is radicalism created and promoted by the Establishment, apparently in opposition to it, but in fact merely an extension, an extreme extrapolation of its own fundamental principles.

On the most basic level we see this bogus radicalism represented in the political extreme Left. Its policies are supposedly 'revolutionary', violently opposed to the central position of the Establishment; but in fact it is created and controlled 'opposition', a point leftward of the leftist consensus. Consider, for example, the question of race. What is the fundamental difference on the race issue between, say, Edward Heath, the Communist party, Margaret Thatcher, Paul Holborow, the Daily Mirror and the Times? All of them detest 'racialism' (and of course the National Front). All of them believe wholeheartedly in a multi-racial society. All of them believe in racial equality. These are the basic issues, not numbers, or immigration 'controls' or the degree of race relations legislation, about which all the above will fight furiously in a mock battle of profound disagreement. Indeed it is because of their essential agreement that all the main parties, together with the extreme Left, are able to unite in various "anti-racialist" organisations. And yet to read the newspapers you would think for all the world that there was real argument and disagreement about race going on.

If the 'revolutionary' Left was really so revolutionary, is it likely that the Establishment would promote it with the publicity and fawning attention it receives? Would Penguin Books so enthusiastically peddle Marxism if Marxism was really such a threat to the established order? Would the BBC continually invite left-wing agitators of every hue and stripe to pronounce on all sorts of matters in television discussions? Would Tariq Ali be invited to promote his 'dangerous' ideas in book reviews for the Sunday newspapers, or Paul Foot of the Socialist Workers Party on What the Papers Say?

DISGUIISING THE FACTS

The Establishment is in fact busy promoting a flurry of fraudulent radicalism to disguise the fact of immoveable consensus. Extremist multi-racialists can thus be contrasted with moderate, 'conservative' but no less committed multi-racialists. Indeed, marking a point to the extreme left actually helps to mobilise the respectable voting fodder behind 'moderate' but no less leftist policies which differ in degree rather than kind.

The public is constantly assailed by manufactured radicalism of all kinds — campaigning newspapers and TV journalists who aggressively take up bogus 'anti-Establishment' positions; leftist pressure groups of every type; student 'dissent'; 'revolutionary' new trends in pop culture that are really the creation of Establishment commercial empires; the approved radical chic of Time Out; and hosts of sociologists, 'underground' artists, academics and assorted intellectuals whose ideas appear "new and challenging" but are nothing more than sterile permutations of left-liberal orthodoxy.

Bogus left-orientated 'radicalism' receives respectful attention, patronage and publicity because it is not a challenge to those basic philosophical beliefs which mould our society. It shares them. What is new, challenging and profoundly radical today is racial nationalism. That is why the BBC holds 'debates' on immigration without inviting the National Front. That is why our viewpoint simply does not exist so far as the world of newspapers, books, television and the academy is concerned. That is why a Bill is being promoted in Parliament to stop our participation in the "democratic process".

It is why the National Front is the target of a universal, unrelenting and vicious hostility that is unprecedented in the history of British politics.

IN BRIEF

• MYTH-MAKER

Spearhead recently commented on the newly published book by Count Nikolai Tolstoy, Victims of Yalta, a work which has expanded our knowledge of the terrible fate suffered by the several million Russian prisoners captured by the Germans during World War II, many of them anti-Communists, who were forcibly repatriated to the Soviet Union after the war by the Allies to be butchered by Stalin. Thousands of them, including the noble Cossacks, preferred suicide rather than deportation to Russia.

But according to a certain Reuben Ainsztein writing in the Sunday Times, this appalling episode in the Allied conduct of the war is "a myth". Solzhenitsyn, Tolstoy and others have made it all up! In his article "Myth of the Yalta 'victims'", Ainsztein tells us what really happened. Apparently, most of these Russians cheerfully volunteered to repatriate themselves, because, of course, they knew they had nothing to fear from kindly Joe Stalin. Only a minority of "the most criminal and degenerate" who volunteered for the SS and took part in "the most atrocious acts" were forcibly repatriated. Among these were the Cossacks, who "excelled in the most ferocious SS divisions" and committed "mass terror against civilians", as did the 15,000 Tsarist emigres. The British authorities, says Ainsztein, "can hardly be criticised for facilitating their return to Odessa and resulting punishment." As for the majority whose 'voluntary' repatriation was assisted by the Allies, well, they were not to know Stalin would start killing them as traitors. On the whole, says Ainsztein, the Allies "erred if anything on the side of excessive leniency."

Before vomiting at this blatant whitewash of Western complicity in Communist genocide, you may care to know that Mr. Ainsztein is fanatically intolerant of other people who detect what they believe are war-time "myths". Mr. Ainsztein, you see, is the author of The Jewish Resistance in Nazi-occupied Europe and is a devout believer in 'The Holocaust'. This is a fantastic tale according to which six million Jews, after being relieved of their dentures, wooden legs and gold teeth, were secretly exterminated at a synthetic rubber factory in 2,000-capacity death chambers disguised as shower-baths with an insecticide gas that was lighter than air but dropped from the ceiling, after which the millions of corpses were disposed of in slow-burning, four-at-a-time cremation ovens — leaving behind mountains of skeletal remains the height of office blocks which were never found and gallons of fat that was turned into soap.

A tall story, you may think. And indeed a number of scholars have come forward recently to say that they think it's a load of old rubbish. But Mr. Ainsztein is not among them. No, anyone who suggests it might not have been quite like that is ferociously attacked by Mr. Reuben "Myth of the Yalta 'victims'" Ainsztein as a "fascist" and a "Nazi"!

• MORE GAS CHAMBERS

Black Africans are beginning to learn the art of political propaganda. It seems they regard all that wishy-washy stuff about South African Black workers chained in the apartheid regime's gold mines for 3 rand a month as no longer effective. They have now taken a leaf from the book of the real experts in political propaganda and come up with — yes — "exterminations"! According to Elija Kavungo, editor of the Zambian Daily Mail, "hundreds" of South African Blacks are "being sent to the gas chambers". When a White South African reporter telephoned the Zambian newspaper to find out the location of the gas chambers, he was told: "Only the editor knows that," and unfortunately, "he was on a study tour of America, meeting top level government contacts."

No doubt Western liberals will be swallowing this second helping of nonsense with just as much relish as they did when it was originally served up.

• ANTI-REDS PURGED

CIA Director Stansfield Turner, a member of the One-World Council on Foreign Relations, has recently announced that 800 members of the US Central Intelligence Agency will be purged. Already, two hundred agents have received their "pink slips" and six hundred more are scheduled to go. These people, it should be noted, are not expendable filing clerks but are among the most talented CIA agents, including senior officers and station chiefs. They are, of course, loyal anti-Communists.

According to syndicated columnist Patrick J. Buchanan, the CIA purge has been carried out at the instigation of David Aaron, Brzezinski's deputy in the National Security Council and formerly a member of the anti-CIA Church Committee. This explains a very great deal.

The CIA administrators and policy-makers are all leftist, internationalist, pro-Soviet members of the 'One World' political-financial Establishment which is dominated by the Rockefeller through the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission. Nearly all members of the National Security Council, which controls the CIA, are CFR and Trilateral members. Security Council boss, Zbigniew Brzezinski, is also

Director of the Trilateral Commission, founded by banker David Rockefeller. You begin to get the picture — of the Yale-Dartmouth-Harvard old-boy network of the CIA as an integral part of the Rockefeller clique which really runs things behind the scenes. Naturally, when the US President set up a Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board to examine the CIA, it was packed by David Rockefeller and his chums.

The trouble is, of course, that while this gang of sleek internationalists directs the policy of the CIA, it nevertheless contains a great number of dedicated, patriotic, 100 per cent American, anti-Communist intelligence officers and agents.

And that is precisely why they have just been given the boot.

• DEGENERATE OF THE MONTH

No, it's not Charles Manson or a hippy dope-addict. It's a clergyman! Not only that, it's an "anti-racist" clergyman as well, as if you hadn't guessed.

It's name is the Reverend Michael Scott. 'Mick', as it likes to be called, is a member of the Peterborough Action Group Against Racism, and Mick has gone on record as saying that the National Front are "violators of humanity". Looking at his photograph, I think you'll agree that is rather amusing. Mick's colleagues in the Peterborough Action Group Against Racism include members of the deeply concerned Socialist Workers Party.

Spearhead will be running an occasional 'Degenerate of the Month' feature in which readers can send in photos of similar creatures and win a free Nationalist Books voucher.

Portrait of a 'Dangerous Dreamer'

With acknowledgements to BEHIND THE NEWS, P.O. Box 552, Pinetown 3600, South Africa.

The "rootless intellectual", "idealist", "dreamer of dreams", "liberal" — call him what you will — represents a spiritual and intellectual blight threatening the survival of the West. The type has been known from time immemorial and has frequently figured at the centre of controversy and trouble. In the dictionary he is labelled as "enthusiast", a word which has unfortunately acquired a secondary and relatively harmless meaning. The original "enthusiast", however, as the dictionary tells us is "a visionary, self-deluded person".

Douglas Reed, brilliant one-time chief European Foreign Correspondent of the London Times and world-famous author has provided us with pen-pictures of three remarkable specimens of the "enthusiast" in action, lifted from the history of the last century: Henry Wentworth Monk, "The Prophet", and his two pre-Raphaelite contemporaries Holman Hunt, the artist, and John Ruskin, Professor of Fine Arts at Oxford University — all zealous reformers and world-improvers.

Monk, who deserves to be regarded as the archetype of the species of "enthusiast" or "dreamer of dreams", differs from millions of others of his kind only in being more extreme and more picturesque. What the Old Testament did to his mind, Marxist and other socialist writings have done to others. Born on a lonely farm on the Ottawa River in Canada, he received his education at the severely puritanical Bluecoat School in London. Douglas Reed takes up the story.

'THE PROPHET'

Thus young Monk had many emotional needs, crying to be appeased, and his child's mind began to find modern applications in the Old Testament, to which his infant mind was so diligently directed. By "swift beasts", he deduced, Isaiah meant railways, and "swift messengers", steamships. He next deduced at this early age, that he had found the keys to "prophecy" and could interpret the mind of God in terms of his day.

Men of rank and influence also were toying with this idea that the time had come for them to make up God's mind. When Monk was eleven a Lord Shaftesbury proposed that the great powers should buy Palestine from the Sultan of Turkey and "restore it to the Jews". England then had a statesman, Lord Palmerston, who did not let such notions disturb his duty, and nothing was done. But in young Monk an idea was ignited, and The Prophet was born; his life thenceforth held no other interest until it ended sixty years later!

At fourteen he obtained special leave to attend a sermon preached by "the first English Bishop in Jerusalem" (whose name, history records, was Solomon Alexander). The little boy returned to school with shining eyes, dedicated to his life's work of procuring Palestine, without regard to the people already in it, for some body of other people utterly unknown to him. The idea would not let him settle down on his father's Canadian farm when he returned to it; it stood between him and the Christian ministry, when he was made a candidate for this. He pored over the Old Testament and found it was but a code, that cleared before his eyes.

ANOTHER ENTHUSIAST

Even in his remote Canadian habitat he found other prophets. An American Jew, a Major Mordecai Noah, was trying to build a Jewish "city of refuge" on an island in the Niagara River, preparatory to "the return"; from what the Jews of North America needed refuge, he alone knew. Also, a Mr. Warder Cresson, the first United States Consul in Jerusalem, became so ardent for "restoration" that he embraced Judaism and published a book, Jerusalem The Centre And Joy Of The Whole World. Returning to America, he cast off his gentile wife, renamed himself Michael Boas Israel, went to Palestine and there contrived to marry a Jewish girl with whom he could communicate only by signs.

All this fired Monk's ardour the more. He decided, in the Old Testamentary tradition, no more to cut his hair or adorn his body until "Zion is restored". As his hair grew abundantly, he became more hirsute; as he sold his small property and thereafter never laboured, he was for the rest of his days dependent on others. At twenty-six he set out for Jerusalem and reached it after much hardship. Having nothing but shagginess and shabbiness to testify to the truth of his message, he found few hearers.

Monk might have disappeared from the annals at that point but for a chance encounter which made him publicly known.

A young English painter, Holman Hunt, appeared in Jerusalem. He also was ready for "a cause", for he was waging the characteristic feud of the young artist against the Academicians, and that produces an inflammable state of mind. He enjoyed ill health and often thought his end near (he lived to be eighty-three). He had just painted The Light of the World, which depicted Jesus, lantern in hand, at the sinner's door, and the sudden apparition of the bearded Monk caught his imagination. He grasped eagerly at the Prophet's idea of threatening mankind (including the Academicians) with extermination if it did not do what Prophecy ordained.

So these two, Prophet and pre-Raphaelite, concerted a plan to startle the indifferent world. Monk depicted "the scapegoat" to Holman Hunt as the symbol of Jewish persecution by mankind. They agreed that Holman Hunt should paint a picture of "the scapegoat" and that Monk should simultaneously write a book explaining that the time had come for the persecuted to be restored, in fulfilment of prophecy.

Holman Hunt went to work; this was a delightful way, both to take a swing at the Royal Academy ("problem pictures") and to identify himself with a cause. His picture would say more than any spoken word, and it would be followed by Monk's written word. The Picture and The Book, The Symbol and The Interpretation, The Herald and The Prophet: once the world beheld "The Scapegoat", Monk's work of revelation would find an audience, awakened to its transgressions and eager to make amends.

Hunt, wearing Arab robes and carrying easel and rifle, was then seen by the puzzled Bedouin driving a white goat to the Dead Sea. He painted an excellent picture of a goat (indeed, of two goats, as the first goat, with excessive zeal, died, and a substitute had to be found). For greater effect, a camel's skeleton was brought from Sodom and a goat's skull borrowed, and these were arranged in the background.

BACK TO ENGLAND

Holman Hunt took it to England, first pledging himself, with Monk, "to the restoration of the Temple, the abolition of warfare among men, and the coming of the Kingdom of God upon the earth"; probably no painter ever had such large purposes in mind when he conceived a picture.

Monk then produced his Simple Interpretation of the Revelation and the joint undertaking was complete; the world had but to respond. In this first book Monk still tried to wed Levitical politics with Christian doctrine. Historically he stayed on safe ground; he pointed out, correctly, that "the ten tribes" could not have become extinct, but lived on in the mass of mankind. This led him to his "interpretation", which was to the effect that "the true Israelites", Jewish and Christian, should migrate to Palestine and establish a model state there. His portrayal of the consequences was plain demagoguery; if this were done, he said, war would come to an end. But then came the paramount idea (and who knows whence Monk got it?): an International Government must be set up in Jerusalem.

Ruskin, too, was the product of early pressures and inner disappointments. Like Monk, he had been drilled in the Old Testament as a child (though by a possessive Puritan mother), and he was recurrently unlucky in love, sometimes humiliatingly so. He was, therefore, at all times in search of an outlet for unspent emotional impulses. He feared life and the future, so that The Prophet's incessant warnings of wrath to come unnerved him and made him put his hand in his pocket. He had a large audience and yielded to the same impiety as Monk and Holman; as his biographer says (Mr. Hesketh Pearson), "he succumbed to the delusion, common to all messiahs, that his word was God's", and in the end his reason waned, but by then he had enabled The Prophet to preach and wander on.

ANOTHER ATTEMPT

After the failure of Monk's book Holman Hunt tried again. He began a painting of Jesus, in the synagogue, reading the messianic prophecies and announcing their fulfilment in himself. To make his meaning clear, he used Monk as the model for the figure of Jesus, and the indignation of the elders was to symbolise the world's rejection of The Prophet. Holman Hunt's preliminary shows Monk holding in one hand the Bible (open at the Book of the Revelation) and in the other a copy of the London Times!

Thereafter human nature slowly had its way. Holman Hunt sold a picture of the Finding of Christ in the Temple for £5,500 and his resentment against life (and the Academicians) mellowed. He found himself unable to ask the tattered Prophet to accompany him to fine houses like those of Val Prinsep and Tennyson. Ruskin was busy with ill-starred loves, and was becoming sceptical as well. Nevertheless, these two sedentary men could not quite forget The Prophet's warnings that they would be destroyed unless they soon effected the restoration of the Jews to Palestine. He was always telling them that "the day" was at hand and pointed to some warlike episode in Africa or Asia Minor or the Balkans or Europe, as the foretold beginning of the end; skirmishes and minor campaigns never lacked. At last Holman Hunt and Ruskin hit on a plan which seemed likely to allay their fears, appease their consciences and rid them of The Prophet; they urged him to go to Jerusalem and (like Sabbatai Zevi) proclaim the approach of The Millennium!

He was about to go when another war broke out, completely confounding him because it was not in any of the places where, interpreting prophecy, he had foretold the beginning of the end of days. It was in the very area from which, according to his published interpretation, salvation was to come: America.

THE ERROR LOCATED

After a glance at the authorities, The Prophet announced that he had located the error in his calculations; the Civil War was in fact the great, premonitory event. Now something must be done about Palestine without delay! John Ruskin put his foot down. If The Prophet were truly a prophet, he said, let him hasten to America before he went to Jerusalem, and call down some sign from heaven that would stop the Civil War. He, Ruskin, would finance the journey. And The Prophet went to stop the Civil War.

(Monk managed to meet President Lincoln and asked for American aid in setting up a Jewish state in Palestine. The President, we learn, rid himself of his troublesome visitor with a good humoured jest: "My chiropodist is a Jew and he has so often put me on my feet that I would have no objection to giving his countrymen a leg up". Then reminding Monk that a war was in progress, he begged The Prophet to await its end, adding: "then we may begin again to see visions and dream dreams". Evidently, Lincoln knew what fate the Old Testament prescribes for "false prophets and dreamers of dreams").

Monk returned to London and Ruskin paid his expenses to Palestine, whence, on arrival, he was deported as a nuisance in 1864. Destitute, he signed as seaman aboard a Boston-bound clipper and, being wrecked, swam the last part of the Atlantic. He was cast ashore bleeding and almost naked, so that, looking like a bear, he was shot as one, in semi-darkness, by a farmer. He lost his memory and mind and in this condition at last came home. He recovered after some years and at once returned to his obsession. The "day of trouble", so long foretold, still had not come; the planet kept its accustomed place. He re-examined prophecy and decided that he had erred in recommending the union of Jews and Christians in the world-state to be set up in Jerusalem. Now he saw that what prophecy required God to do was first to put the Jews in possession of Palestine, and then to set up a worldwide organisation with power to enforce the submission of nations to its law.

A 'SIGN FROM HEAVEN'

He was forgotten in the Ottawa Valley when, in 1870, his hope (one must use the word) that "the day of troubles" was at last at hand, was revived by a huge forest fire, which he took as a sign from heaven that the time had come. Somehow he made his way to London (1872) and to Hunt and Ruskin, who had thought him dead. Ruskin was wooing Rose La Touche, so that for the time he was unresponsive to warnings of doom and wrote to The Prophet, "I acknowledge the wonderfulness of much that you tell me, but I simply do not believe that you can understand so much about God when you understand so little about man . . . You appear to me to be mad, but for aught I know I may be mad myself". (These last words, unhappily, were prescient).

Such admonitions were not new to the Prophet. His relatives and friends had ever implored him, if he felt called to improve mankind, to look around him at home: the lot of the Canadian Indians, or even of the Canadians, might be bettered. To a man who held the key to divine revelation advice of this kind was sacrilegious, and Monk, by way of various pamphlets, came at length to the idea of a "Palestine Restoration Fund". For the purpose he borrowed a notion of Ruskin's, originally devised to help Ruskin's own country; namely, that wealthy folk should forfeit a tithe of their incomes for the purpose of reclaiming English wastelands. Monk decided that the tithe should serve a better object: the "return"!

By this time (1875) Ruskin was once more unnerved, first by the death of Rose La Touche and next by the apparent imminence of one more distant war (this time a British-Russian one). Clearly The Prophet was right after all; the "day of troubles" was come. Ruskin signed Monk's manifesto and dedicated a tenth of his income to The Prophet's fund for the purchase of Palestine from the Sultan, while the English wastelands stayed unreclaimed. When this was achieved, a congress of all nations was to set up a federation of the world in Jerusalem.

A CALL FOR MONEY

The Prophet, thus propped on his feet again, was further helped by Laurence Oliphant, a lion of the Victorian drawing rooms whom he had by chance met when he made his way about America, hobo-fashion. Oliphant was a man of different type, a bold, cynical adventurer. The idea of buying Palestine appealed to him, but he had no illusions about it. He wrote to Monk, "Any amount of money can be raised upon it, owing to the belief which people have that they would be fulfilling prophecy and bringing on the end of the world. I don't know why they are so anxious for the latter event, but it makes the commercial speculation easy." Oliphant, as will be seen, did not trouble to hide his disdain for The Prophet's message.

In 1880 Holman Hunt, again enjoying deteriorated health, was so alarmed by small warlike episodes in Egypt and South Africa that he thought extinction at hand and joined with Monk in issuing a manifesto which anticipated the Zionist-ruled world-government schemes of this century. It was headed "The abolition of national warfare", called on all men of goodwill to subscribe a tenth of their income to the realisation of "the Kingdom of God" in the form of a world-government to be set up in Palestine and to be called the United Nations, and proposed that the money be given to Mr. Monk for the purpose of acquiring Palestine.

That was the finish. Ruskin, approaching his end, rudely refused all further part in the fantasy. Oliphant dropped out. The "Bank of Israel" came to nothing. Samuel Butler showed The Prophet the door. Even Holman Hunt at last appealed to him

ON THE UNIVERSITY FRONT

AS SOMEONE who is both a member of the NF and a student at university I would like to say something about the political climate within our universities and about the prospects of the National Front in student politics.

There is at present an almost universal assumption by the general public that all students are left wing extremists. It is an assumption that has its roots in the student militancy of the sixties and has been kept alive by sensationalist and often inaccurate reporting in certain newspapers. Small isolated incidents are blown up out of all proportion and presented to the public as though they were the "norm". The fact is that the vast majority of students are not left wing at all. They are politically apathetic while a disproportionate minority of left wing extremists control the student unions. The SWP are as big a joke for most students as they are for the British people in general. The tragedy of the situation is that apathy has allowed the clowns of the left to seize the reins of power and abuse union facilities. In many cases the resources of the student unions will be used to further the cause of Marxist subversion without so much as consulting union members. Many students are not even aware that their money is being spent in this way. I find it more than a little ironic that I should have to pay for coachloads of red hooligans to go and break up meetings that I shall be attending.

Despite this situation the gutter press continues to churn out stories which suggest that all students are raving Marxist revolutionaries. If we are to believe one story that appeared in the Sunday Mirror, the left wing views of an entire student audience at a pop concert had gone to such obscene lengths that on principle they would not allow themselves to gaze on their own national flag. The alleged incident occurred at an end of term concert at Birmingham Polytechnic. A group had been booked, one member of which played an electronic organ. The organ was a shabby affair so a union jack was draped over it to hide the deteriorating paintwork. The students who had been whipped into a frenzy by this blatant and disgraceful show of patriotism all indulged in that infamous student pastime, a sit-in. This situation continued, so we are told, until the offending article was removed.

I would be very interested to hear from a student who attended the concert what actually happened. This account is entirely inconsistent with my experience of students at university or polytechnic. Allowing for Sunday Mirror sensationalism, the truth of the matter is probably that a small group of leftist troublemakers held up the concert, and rather than cause a confrontation over such a trivial matter, the majority let them have their own way. Are we really to believe that the whole audience spontaneously reacted in this thoroughly unreasonable way? Yet this is the picture of British students that is being presented to the public by the media.

APATHY

The situation in the student unions is much the same as it is in so many trade unions. The official policy may be left wing due to the active minority of Marxists but the chances are that the membership either disagrees with it, or more probably, doesn't care about it. In my first week at university I attended a union general meeting that had been called to reaffirm the union policy of "no platform for racists". I was astonished to find that out of a university population of over 11,000, barely 100 people attended the meeting. I could not understand why such a small percentage of the students bothered to take part in what is after all, the running of their own union.

The reason is simply that the left have convinced most students that unless you are left wing there is no place for you in student politics. Individuals who dare to voice an even moderately right wing opinion are immediately bullied into feeling isolated and are led to believe that they are despised by their fellow students. This tactic has been used quite successfully in national politics on matters of immigration. Sadly the human desire to be liked usually triumphs in such cases and the heretic will usually either conform or drop out of politics altogether.

There are therefore no provisions for right wing or nationalist students to take part in student politics. The political societies are all left wing. A look through a Manchester University (or any other university for that matter) student handbook will confirm this. There is a brief resume of the eight political societies, six of which are openly Marxist. This leaves the Union of Liberal Students and the Federation of Conservative Students. The Liberals apparently call themselves "libertarian socialists" and "transfer their votes to the revolutionary left" while the FCS describe themselves as "social democrats"! Judging by recent events within the FCS they too have become increasingly attracted to Marxism. They have been criticised by Tory MP Nicholas Winterton who was alarmed to find that there was virtually no difference between FCS policies and Communist Party policies. FCS President David Wilks cleverly pointed out that it is wrong to call Tories Communists, you "should instead call to preach "that there is a God in heaven, who will judge every man on earth" and to desist from pretending in effect that he, Monk, was God. The Jews spoke similarly: one told him, "The land of our forefathers is dead, and Palestine is its grave ... to attempt to form a nation from the polyglot people of Judaism today would only end in utter failure."

Monk was beyond redemption. In 1884 the Bluecoat boy returned to Ottawa for the last time and spent his final years canvassing, pamphleteering and haranguing members of the Canadian House of Commons as they sat, between sessions, in their garden by the Ottawa River. They listened to him with amused indulgence; sixty years later Canadian Ministers, at Ottawa and New York, were to repeat all the things Monk said as the unassailable principles of high policy, and no Member would demur. (Copyright Douglas Reed).

WHAT IT MEANS

Comment: What can we learn from Douglas Reed's brilliant pen-picture? The "enthusiast" or "dreamer of dreams" is possessed by his ideas, rather than possessing them — a most significant difference! These ideas, combining to form "an ideology" or religion substitute, have considerable powers of attraction for minds lacking the protection of a genuine religious faith; because they promise a safer, more congenial world; they are, therefore, also infectious.

Ideological enthusiasts can be said to be afflicted with the intellectual equivalent of a disease known as brucellosis abortus, or contagious abortion; they conceive readily enough, but their brain-children are invariably stillborn. Or to put it differently, when it comes to real action, realpolitik, the "dreamer" or "enthusiast" is totally sterile. He is dangerous, however, because he can be used. Utopianism, after all, requires, before all else, the overthrow of the existing order. "Dreamers" when they have multiplied in a population can be organised into a destructive force by hard-headed revolutionaries who have reasons of a very different kind for wanting to overthrow the prevailing order.

The psychology of the "dreamer of dreams" (better known today as the "liberal") is the key to a highly developed applied science of psychological and political warfare, enabling a small, well organised power-elite to impose its will on vast population groups. The entire history of our century is thus a drama which has unfolded out of what can happen in the mind of an individual who has lost the protection of a genuine religion.

Student hooligan minority riots against NF

Communists Tories"! How cunning!

Is there any wonder that, when faced with this sort of situation, the majority decide to opt out of student politics altogether? To many it all seems irrelevant. And yet if there was a positive alternative and the majority collectively opposed the Marxists, the left would be driven back into their sewers. The left wing maintain their precarious position of authority in much the same way as a lion tamer does over his lions — by the exploitation of ignorance. They realise that the majority of students have the ability to bring about their downfall but ironically the students themselves are unaware of it. As long as this situation exists, the left will continue to control student politics. If on the other hand the mass of students could be, first, made aware of their strength, and then co-ordinated so as to collectively oppose the leftist tyranny, their victory would be assured. There is in effect the classic pre-revolution situation. The grievances are there and the masses are "ripe for revolt". All that is needed is the emergence of a real alternative; a leadership that will unite the presently divided opposition and lead it forward as one body. I believe that the National Front can provide that leadership.

We have a significant role to play, although, at this stage it would be foolish to attempt anything that could divert the energies and resources of young members away from the schools. As a rule the so-called academic mind is a lot less receptive to new ideas at the age of 18 plus than at school age. It is inevitable however that because of our campaign within the sixth forms, every new academic year will see an increasingly large influx of NF members into the universities and polytechnics. Work done in the schools today will be of benefit to us in the future when the time comes to oust the left from the student unions.

For the time being our work within the universities must be cautious. While we should certainly let it be known that we exist, we are not yet in a position to embark on any bold initiatives that would either leave us open to attack or betray our size. Our movement within the universities is in its infancy, although it is growing.

At the same time, however, we should lead the left to believe that the NF breakthrough is imminent. They are now so panicky that they see a "fascist" under every stone and behind every tree. They have become totally neurotic — even paranoid, about the prospect of NF members in the universities. The merest suspicion of NF activity sparks off chain reactions in all directions. The appearance of a few NF stickers produced the following hysterical outburst in a Manchester University student publication:

"Incidents of racial discrimination and racist provocation are becoming more frequent within the university. Offensive graffiti and stickers appear on the walls of university buildings. Jewish and overseas students are intimidated and insulted by National Front members in Cornbrook House, one of the University's residences. National Front groups are known to operate in other halls of residence..."

If stickers can produce this reaction, just imagine what a few more spectacular stunts could achieve!

At the same time as the left is being "flustered" we must be carefully preparing the ground for an extensive National Front movement within the universities. While initially we must rely on recruitment in the schools for most of our new members, this need not be exclusively so and will become less so with the nationwide progression of our movement. Steady effort should be made to recruit new members inside the universities themselves. One way in which this could be done is by the establishment of "cultural societies". A "British Heritage Preservation Society", for example, may well attract a great deal of potential nationalists. The members of such a society could then be sounded out to see where their sympathies lay. If the results were encouraging to the extent that the majority of the members sympathised with nationalist policies, the society could later be transformed so as to be openly National Front.

Our universities are not hotbeds of left wing extremism. The majority of students are opposed to Marxism but lack a viable alternative to it. If we can make the National Front that alternative we will eliminate Communism from our universities for ever.

The EEC: an expensive farce that divides Europe

"WE TOO want to see peace, friendship and co-operation among Europeans, and it is for that very reason that we say Britain must come out of the Common Market. If you try to drive people too close together, you will usually succeed in driving them further apart. If there is one thing that will undermine peace, friendship and co-operation between Britain and Europe, which will turn the British people against Europe, it is the thought that people on the Continent are trying to dictate to us how to run our own affairs."

John Tyndall (Bolton,
February 10th 1978)

By a paradox that would seem strange only to the unthinking. The Common Market, which was purportedly set up to unite Europe, is succeeding only in dividing Europe. The Common Market bureaucracy is nothing but a squabbling farce. It is also an expensive farce which is lining the pockets of its participants at a huge cost to the taxpayers of the constituent Common Market nations.

These are the findings of a man who for a year was a member of the European Assembly before, disgusted, he packed it up. He is Christopher Price, Labour MP for Lewisham West.

"I was becoming," Mr. Price said recently, "part of a vastly expensive system which seemed to me to be working to very little effect . . . I felt it was toytown politics rather than real politics."

One of the things that have appalled Mr. Price is the cost of the Assembly. It already takes £75 million a year to run. When direct elections increase the size both of its membership and its secretariat, its annual expenditure could reach £300 million. If Spain, Portugal and Greece join, this could rise to £500 million, due to the complications of having three extra languages to deal with.

A big factor in all this is the system of lucrative expense accounts for members. The standard allowance is £48 a day. Although this is not excessive for the British and Irish members, who have to fly to the Continent and then stay in hotels there, it is highly profitable to the many members who live within easy driving distance of Brussels and Strasbourg. They can return home the same night as they attend a meeting and collect the full allowance.

Mr. Price estimates that some Continental members could have amassed £50,000 each operating on this basis over the last 10 years.

Mr. Price goes on to say that for all this expense the European Assembly is totally ineffective. Theoretically, the Assembly is supposed to be the watchdog over the Commission and the Council of Ministers but in practice it never dares to criticise them. No report is ever produced by the Assembly's committees which is offensive to either body.

As for the committees themselves, they represent such divergent national interests that it is hardly ever possible to agree on anything fundamental. Every report produced has to be so watered down so as to not offend one or another national faction that in the end the reports contain nothing concrete at all, only meaningless verbiage. Says Mr. Price:—

"And the short answer to what happens to a report then is: nothing. Neither the Commission nor the Council of Ministers is required to do anything about it."

Said the Evening News (a pro-Market paper) commenting on the Price findings:—

"Britain has earned itself an odious name of late in Continental countries precisely because British ministers have been doing openly what their European counterparts were for years accustomed to doing behind a smokescreen of European rhetoric: protecting national interests."

These words confirm what the Common Market has always been: not an institution to unite European nations but one which only gets them acting in greater rivalry and discord. Says Price:—

"The year has made me realise what a menace the EEC is to Britain."

The National Front has always had a much more realistic policy for bringing about harmony in Europe; it is for each of the great European nations to get together and agree on separate spheres of interest, then, this agreement having been reached, for none to intrude upon the sphere of another.

None of Britain's essential spheres of interest lie in Europe at all; they lie around the world, connected by the world's ocean routes. In the protection of these spheres of interest there is no ground whatever for a quarrel with our European neighbours.

We can only properly protect these legitimate national spheres of interest if we get out of the Common Market and re-deploy our energies in the world beyond.

Then when we have done so and are once again masters in our own house we can negotiate with the European nations from a position of strength in the specific areas where common action is mutually beneficial, such as defence, environmental and cultural matters and certain fields of pooled technology.

In none of these things do we need the elaborate and costly apparatus of a European Parliament, Commission and Council of Ministers. We can tackle them through the normal diplomatic channels we have always maintained.

No one would lose from this reduction of the European ideal to feasible and manageable proportions.

No one, that is, except the gentlemen who draw the fabulous expense allowances.

SIR: 38 years ago I was evacuated from Dunkirk. In the following months my Company 689 GCRE was billeted at Strand school, Elm Park, Brixton, and our assignment was bomb disposal and demolition in south London. I had no intention then of deserting Brixton, and when it comes to the by-election there soon I will again be serving the White community in that district and again have no intention of deserting my duty, which will be to serve our Lambeth Branch of the National Front. I will be available for leafletting etc., and will not submit to threats of violence aimed at keeping me off the streets. Incidentally, I was born in Battersea, but spent a number of years at Clapham, which has the same problems as Brixton and my heart bleeds for our people there.

SIR: How delighted we must all be with the news of the latest "hard line" recommendations from the All-Party Select Committee on Immigration!

This devastating and ferocious report recommends fearful new laws to clamp down on immigration into Britain, terribly inhuman laws which let in only wives and children as dependants!!

"A gift to racials" shouted one Immigrant leader!

"Completely alien to Britain" shouted a masochistic Labour MP (or did he say Brixton?)

Now that we have all got over the shock of this frighteningly tough new report, and while the Government finds ways of apologising to the Immigrant leaders for even thinking of such proposals, can we assume that the next giant leap forward will be, one day, perhaps, to actually . . . stop Immigration?

SIR: I would be pleased if you could make it plain to your readers where you stand with regard to the military junta in Argentina. Ronald Rickcord in the February issue refers to the corrupt and inefficient regime of President Videla. The political pundits who are always ready to equate an orderly society with the restraints of dictatorship are, of course, intoning these very sentiments, as they have done with Chile. Surely after four years of murder and mayhem by the backsliding section of middle class Marxist intelligentsia — namely the Monteneros — such a regime is a blessing? In one of the many red assassinations of those times, in which the victim, an affluent member of Argentine society, was ambushed, dragged from his car and shot, a female member of the gang, who it later turned out was the daughter of a banker, then despatched the chauffeur with a giggle and a bullet in the brain. Is it not better for society that, in such circumstances, the power of maintaining law and order be taken out of the hands of the liberal masochists, and summary justice be dispensed by the military, albeit undemocratically, as in Chile and surely as it should have been in Northern Ireland?

SIR: I read in the Spectator that Morarji Desai, the Prime Minister of India (and therefore a very 'cultured' person who probably had the benefit of British schooling) drinks his own urine every morning. He is now busy imposing — not birth control — but prohibition in his country, so perhaps he wishes that all his countrymen take up his peculiar habit.

Mr. Desai told the Spectator in all seriousness: "For the past five or six years I have drunk a glass of my own urine — about six to eight ounces — every morning. It is very, very good for you. And it's free. It doesn't cost anything . . . Even in the Bible it says to drink from your own cistern. What is your own cistern? It's your own urine. Urine is the Water of Life."

JENNIFER NEWMAN

SIR: I am glad to see Spearhead laying stress on "minority racism". It may seem an obvious point now, but Wilmot Robertson did something very important when he defined the nature of the present day racial conflict in The Dispossessed Majority. Philosophers today are emphasising the importance of language in our ability to get at the truth of things, and Robertson enabled us to really conceptualise the race problem with his coining of "Majority dispossession" and aggressive "minority racism", whereby Anglo-Saxon power, institutions and culture are being eroded world-wide.

LETTER OF THE MONTH

Spearhead publishes the best letter to the press on National Front policy every month. Send your cutting to us not later than the 15th of the previous month. You could win a £1 Nationalist Books voucher.

JUST a few points I hope one or two of your more enlightened readers may be able to clear up for me.

(1) I don't think there are a more nationalist people than those of the State of Israel, good for them!

They now have a right-wing government in power under the leadership of Menachem Begin. The same Israeli government have the most stringent immigration laws, good for them! Yet when an Englishman preaches the same nationalism and asks for the same immigration laws to be applied in Great Britain he is immediately called "insecure," an "anti-Semite," "Nazi," "Fascist," "racist," and all the other rubbish that, in general, pour from the lips of our home-grown and our imported socialists and communists. Why?

(2) A National Front election march in Ilford was banned because of the threatened trouble from an assortment of people including Mr Ygael Gluckstein's (otherwise known as Tony Cliff); Socialist Workers' (?) Party. Yet, at last year's West Indian, Notting Hill Carnival, more than 400 London policemen were injured, some very seriously, in violent anti-police riots. I don't think I need elaborate as readers will probably remember this riot.

Yet, the National Front and their supporters were nowhere near this so-called "carnival." But, of course, the Socialist Workers' Party were there, handing out their leaflets reading: "The police are the real muggers."

Who then, are the real men and women of violence, hate and subversion?

(3) The Trades Union Congress says it wants a 100 per cent "closed shop" in the British Press (heaven forbid) and British industry. It is said it will better protect the interests of the workers.

Yet the same TUC advocate an open-door policy on immigration into Great Britain — "in the name of tolerance and democracy," we are told.

Just whose interests then are these trade union leaders looking out for? Could their open-door policy have anything to do with the words of Russian Revolutionary leader, Lenin, who said: "The English will never create revolution in their own country, that revolution will have to be imported for them?"

(4) Is the socialist political violence we are now seeing on our British streets, violence used not just against the NF; or the violence used against policemen at Notting Hill, but also the violence we witnessed outside the factory gates at Grunwick's where Labour MPs also joined the so-called "mass picket" which resulted in a battle between "pickets" and police? Is all this political, industrial and racial violence the beginning of Lenin's "imported revolution?"

NATIONALIST.

Trouble shooting

Red Bedfellows

During March, when the newspapers were full of the growing might of Italy's "moderate" Communist Party and of the huge proportion of the poll won by the French Left alliance of the Socialist and Communist parties, the Communist Party of Great Britain thought it would be an auspicious moment to jump onto the 'Euro-Communist' Broad Left bandwaggon.

As a result the CP leadership wrote to the National Executive of the Labour Party proposing that both "Socialist" parties should get together for the General Election campaign. A rebuff was issued on behalf of the Labour Party by Ron Hayward, its National Secretary. He wrote:

"The Labour Party has no desire to have any discussions or contacts whatsoever with your party. We regard your party in exactly the same way as we do our other political opponents."

Unlike in Italy or France the Communist Party of Great Britain has no mass public following, no giant block of votes to deliver, no members in Parliament. It has nothing to offer that would make an alliance with it a useful proposition.

But the leaders of the Communist Party know the facts of political life — as they apply in Britain — concerning their party better than I. So why did they make the offer to the Labour Party?

The first possibility is that during the past couple of years — perhaps much longer — the Communist Party has been running rapidly downhill. The sales of its daily paper, the Morning Star have been dropping steadily as have the donations from its readership. The paper relies ever more heavily on the bulk sales of each issue to various Iron Curtain countries.

Membership recruitment has not been lower for years and the Young Communist League hardly exists at all. On top of this the party's attempt to popularise itself by adopting (after a year of crippling boring 'debate') an apparently less hard-line policy enshrined in a document called The British Road to Socialism, led to a thorough-going split. A significant minority of members, unashamed Stalinists, broke away to form the New Communist Party.

In view of this it could be that the CP leadership regarded an alliance with the Labour Party as a much needed port in a storm and hoped that the Labour Party would seize the opportunity of tidying away a possible competitor for a few votes just before the General Election.

While it is true that the CP has not been doing well as a party, I do not feel that this is the reason for its public appeal to the Labour Party. However badly the well known aspects of the CP's operation may be doing at present the party still has its organisational infrastructure which is supported behind-the-scenes by a wide variety of money-spinning business operations — not just Colletts Bookshop and one or two publishing companies, but also property companies.

The second and I think more likely reason for the CP's public offer was in order to get the equally public rebuff. I suspect the whole operation was a pre-General Election publicity gimmick conducted by the Communists of the Labour Party and of the Communist Party designed to allay public fears — and indeed the fears of many naive Labour Party rank and filers — concerning the extreme Leftward course of the Labour Party.

Examples of this are numerous. For example, what do Labour Party member Bishop Mervyn Stockwood, Communist Party Lewisham Organiser Mike Power and former Labour Mayor of Lewisham Roger Godsiff have in common? Two things: firstly they all support the Morning Star (Stockwood regularly writing article for it; Mike Power by writing articles for it and helping to sell it on street corners; Godsiff by opening bazaars organised for the purpose of raising funds to subsidise it); secondly they were at the front of the Left Wing "anti-racist" demonstration against the National Front in Lewisham in August last year.

To the list of prominent Labour Party members who either open Morning Star bazaars, speak from the platform of 'Morning Star' rallies, or otherwise promote the circulation of the paper, which is the official organ of the National Executive of the Communist Party, should be added the names of many Labour MP's, not least those of Judith Hart and Joan Maynard — members of the Labour Party's National Executive!

Joining Mesdames Hart and Maynard and the other Marxists on the National Executive of the Labour Party in March was Tony Saunois. He was elected to the Executive as the representative of the Labour Party Young Socialists at a LPYS conference at Llandudno.

Among the policies advocated by the LPYS and endorsed by Saunois are: the abolition of the Monarchy; the nationalisation of the Press and the control "by the Labour movement" of all TV and radio stations.

The leaders of the Labour Party were among the large gang of hypocrites who loudly protested against the distribution by members of the Young National Front of leaflets to school pupils at school gates. The Labour leaders were silent, however, when their own youth group distributed in March 100,000 copies of a leaflet to school pupils entitled For Whose Benefit is Education Run?

The leaflet demanded recognition of the so-called "National Union of School Students" (which is organised by the Communist Party and other species of young Marxist); the abolition of school uniforms, of religious "indoctrination", of corporal punishment and of all fee-paying schools.

The decision of Sir David McNee, London Police Commissioner, to ban all political marches in London until a date in late April caused even more Labour Party Reds to surface. In early March an official of the International Marxist Group, David Jones, convened a special meeting of Marxist elements from a wide cross-section of parties and unions (in a room at County Hall, head office of the Greater London Council!).

Only "comrades" known to and trusted by Jones were allowed into this meeting. Among these were two ultra-Left Lambeth Labour Councillors Ken Livingstone and Ted Knight. The comrades protested that marches organised by the Anti-Apartheid Movement, the National Union of Students, and the Haringey Anti-Racist Committee had been disrupted by the ban which, in their view, should only be applied against the National Front, not against the "progressive" organisations and the "Labour movement".

The incidents I have referred to are only a tiny sample of the instances of the Communist penetration of the Labour Party at every level. This is why I feel there must have been sly smiles on the faces of the members of the National Executive of the Communist Party when they sent their letter to the Labour Party and even slyer smiles when in reply they got Ron Hayward's letter saying that the Labour Party regarded the Communist Party "in exactly the same way as we regard our other political opponents."

NF housewives fight Lambeth and Wycombe seats

Lambeth Central: HELENA STEVEN

Wycombe: SYLVIA JONES

Housewives and mothers are fighting both the forthcoming Parliamentary by-elections for the National Front.

In Lambeth Central, which of course includes the multi-racial jungle of Brixton and Clapham, our candidate is Helena Steven, 37 years of age and the mother of a young son, Andrew, aged four. Helena was born in south-east London, and worked for a firm of City solicitors before the birth of her baby. A member of the National Front for ten years, she beat the Liberal in last year's GLC election for Woolwich East. Her husband Ian, whom she met in the National Front, is the party's Greenwich Branch Organiser.

Helena has bravely canvassed White voters door to door in the heart of the most Immigrant-infested areas, campaigning boldly on the issue of Black muggings against defenceless White women.

Another Immigrant-swamped area is Wycombe, in beautiful, rural Buckinghamshire. Carrying the NF message to the electors there is Mrs. Sylvia Jones. 36 years old Sylvia, who has lived in Wycombe for 20 years, has a 12 year old son, Lewis. Her husband is Chairman of High Wycombe Branch.

Managing the campaign in Wycombe is dedicated East Londoner John Roberts, who put in a fine performance as campaign manager in the Ilford by-election and has recently been co-opted to the National Elections Department.

The campaign in this rural district has been marred by the usual hooliganism from Socialist Workers Party louts, as well as gangs of roaming 'Rastafarian' Negroes, who throughout have attacked NF campaigners and brawled with the police. One sixteen year-old schoolgirl and YNF activist, Venetia Compton, who was selling NF News in the shopping centre, stood her ground as she was surrounded by a gang of woolly-hatted Blacks who flicked lighted matches at her. Keith Neville, the agent in the campaign and a local bus driver, has steadfastly refused to be intimidated by SWP hooligans who have attacked his home and tried to get him sacked from his job. The Wycombe campaign has once again taught the Reds that the NF is never intimidated.

VENETIA COMPTON

Nationwide NF campaign in May Council Elections

Many hundreds of National Front candidates will be standing in the local government elections in May. All over Britain, in the Metropolitan areas of Yorkshire, Lancashire, Greater Manchester, the West Midlands, Merseyside and Tyne & Wear, as well as all boroughs in Greater London, NF candidates will be taking their message to local people: "Britons FIRST in jobs, housing, education and welfare." In London alone it is expected that around 500 candidates will be fighting the ward elections.

The campaign will be fought principally on the massive burden of local authority debt incurred through the private banking system — the real cause of rent and rates rises and cuts in services — as well as immigration.

NF candidates will also be campaigning against the decline of educational standards as the result of "progressive" teaching methods and do-as-you-please discipline; Town Hall corruption which has been the hallmark of Tory, Labour and Liberal councils; and the new scheme promoted by the Tories to spend millions more pounds of ratepayers' money on job creation schemes exclusively for Immigrants.

OBITUARY

It is with deepest regret that we have to announce the death of Peter Jarman, who died in hospital on the 14th March, aged 43.

A devoted Nationalist, Peter joined the National Front immediately it was formed, and he was one of the first National Front candidates in the country; he contested a local council election in Dover on behalf of the party in March 1967.

No armchair politician, Peter was a real worker for the Nationalist cause as a totally dependable Dover Branch activist, as a Branch Committee member, and as a National Front candidate; he scarcely missed either a local or a national activity.

On the occasion of the historic Hyde march Peter was one of a small group of Dover Branch members that was viciously attacked and stoned by a mob of Immigrant SWP hooligans. They were quickly put to flight, but not before Peter had been severely injured, needing stitches to a head wound and treatment for fractured ribs.

Peter recovered and returned briefly to his Branch work. However he subsequently developed chronic liver failure, and his condition deteriorated rapidly and irreversibly.

Peter's gentle temperament, his intelligence and cheerfulness will be sadly missed by all who knew him. As one of the first to stand up and fight for a British future, he will not be forgotten by those who carry on the struggle.

Our deepest sympathy goes to his wife and three children.

A lesson in intelligent argument

Young members of the Socialist Workers Party/"Anti-Nazi League" alliance have decided to use "intelligent argument" to combat the Young National Front, the Brighton Evening Argus revealed recently.

SCHOOLCHILDREN and students from all over Sussex met yesterday to discuss measures to counter the National Front's "recruitment campaign" in the county's schools.

Those attending the Anti-Fascist Day Workshop at Sussex University listened to speakers from the National Union of Students, the Anti-Nazi League, and Skan — Schoolkids against Nazis.

One youngster said: "Only a minority of kids in our schools are listening to the National Front."

"We shall just talk to them, put the other side, and if they have got any intelligence they will see they are wrong and come over to our side."

New NF Booklet

THE SPOKEN WORD: A Guide to Public Speaking and the Presentation of Public Meetings, by John Tyndall. 15p.

All NF Branch Organisers, committee members, candidates and others involved in the presentation of NF meetings will find this an invaluable booklet.

The section on Speaking in Public considers the subject from all angles — from the content of a speech and how to prepare it to the different types of meetings you will be involved in, such as meetings of members or a meeting where there is hostile opposition, explaining how you should tackle these.

The second part of the booklet deals with the staging of public meetings, and how these should be done with pageantry and effectiveness. It also deals with the advertising of meetings, literature display, amplification, music, fund-raising, Question time, security at meetings, in fact everything you need to be proficient in if you are to organise a really professional meeting.

WEAR A ROSE!

"DISTINCTIVE Beers. 300 years of brewing tradition watched over by old Ben Truman himself" — so the advertising jargon goes. Probably no other brewery relies to such an extent on creating an image of tradition and wholesomeness as do Trumans, the East London brewery.

Yet this picture of an old independent family concern is an utter fraud. Trumans is now just a cog in the giant Maxwell Joseph catering empire, an empire which includes that other brewing giant Watneys, as well as the synthetic and vulgar Berni Inns.

Joseph got his hands on the brewery in 1972. His first action seems to have been to acquire the magnificent Gainsborough portrait of Sir Benjamin Truman from the brewery for an estimated £175,000. In 1977 he flogged it to America for the sum of £450,000. Intervention by the Tate Gallery has stopped the export until April, in an attempt to raise the money to purchase the portrait for the nation.

Whatever happens you can be sure that the nation will be the loser. Either the painting will go to America or we will end up providing Mr. Joseph with a nice fat profit of £275,000.

During the five years after Maxwell Joseph had acquired the portrait, Trumans were claiming the painting as part of their heritage — in television advertising and especially in an art competition launched in 1976. It was publicised by a leaflet showing the Gainsborough portrait under the headline 'The Truman Heritage', and claimed: "To connoisseurs of fine art the boardroom at the Truman brewery contains a treasure." There was no mention that for three years it had not even been the property of the brewery. The leaflet concluded with a reference to the portrait's return to the boardroom "never to leave again" (sic).

Judge for yourself whether Joseph's actions were those of a connoisseur of the arts, or of the vulgar cosmopolitanism that now pervades both our cultural and economic life.

P.S. In December 1977 Trumans brewery banned the National Front from using meeting rooms in its pubs. No reason has been given, though Mr. Joseph's involvement is thought by some to provide a clue.
